Irish Studies Seminars Spring 2021: Irish postcolonial studies: legacies and agendas 15th April 21

About this event: Was Irish postcolonial studies too focused on empire to deal adequately with the complexities of the Irish situation historically or with the realities of contemporary neoliberal Ireland? Has Irish postcolonial studies been sufficiently attentive to the range of Irish involvements with empire? To what extent has it nurtured and sustained critical engagements with other colonial or postcolonial situations and cultures? Did Irish postcolonial studies deal with the question of capital as well as that of empire? Will twenty-first century critical frameworks offer more robustly productive modes of analysis of current cultural production and of the political dilemmas of the moment? The panel includes Emer Nolan (MU, chair); Treasa De Loughry (UCD); David Lloyd (UC Riverside); Caoilfhionn Ní Bheacháin (UL); Lionel Pilkington (NUIG); Malcolm Sen (U Mass Amherst) Irish postcolonial studies: legacies and agendas panel bios: Treasa De Loughry is Lecturer in World Literature in the School of English, Drama and Film at University College, Dublin. Her main research interests lie in the study of environmental humanities in world and postcolonial literature, especially issues of energy, waste, pollution and food. She is the author of The Global Novel and Capitalism in Crisis: Contemporary Literary Narratives (Palgrave Macmillan, 2020). Her new book will focus on cultural registrations of waste work in West Africa, and South and East Asia. David Lloyd is Distinguished Professor of English at the University of California, Riverside. He works primarily on Irish culture and on postcolonial and cultural theory. His books include Ireland after History (Cork UP, 1999); Irish Culture and Colonial Modernity (Cambridge UP, 2011); Beckett's Thing: Theatre and Painting (Edinburgh UP, 2016); and Under Representation: The Racial Regime of Aesthetics (Fordham UP, 2018). He is currently working on a book on law, poetry and violence that will include essays on W.B. Yeats, César Vallejo, Aimé Césaire and Paul Celan. Caoilfhionn Ní Bheacháin is Lecturer in Communications in the Department of Management and Marketing at the Kemmy Business School, University of Limerick. Her research interests are situated at the interface between communications and cultural studies. She is the author of a range of essays on Irish writers, including Teresa Deevy, and on Irish republicanism in relation to imperialism in India and Latin America. These include "The mosquito press: anti-imperialist rhetoric in republican journalism, 1926-39" (2007) and "Seeing Ghosts: Gothic Discourses and State Formation" (2012), both in Eire-Ireland; and (with A. Mitchell) "Alice Stopford Green and Vernon Lee: Salon Culture and Intellectual Exchange", Journal Of Victorian Culture (2020). Lionel Pilkington is Professor in the Department of English, NUI Galway where he teaches drama and theatre studies, Irish writing, and cultural politics. He is the author of Theatre and the State in Twentieth-century Ireland (Routledge, 2001) and Theatre and Ireland (Palgrave Macmillan, 2010) and co-editor of Gender and Colonialism (Galway UP, 1995) and Studies in Settler Colonialism: Identity, Politics and Culture (Palgrave, 2011). Malcolm Sen is Assistant Professor in the Department of English at the University of Massachusetts Amherst. His research interests focus on questions of justice, statecraft, and postcolonial politics as they emerge in this contemporary moment of climate crisis. He is co-editor of Postcolonial Studies and the Challenges of the New Millennium (Routledge, 2016) and of Race in Irish Literature and Culture (2021), and author of the forthcoming Cambridge History of Irish Literature and the Environment (2021). He is currently working on a new book entitled Unnatural Disasters: Irish Literature, Climate Change and Sovereignty. Future Seminars 29 April 4-6 pm. Sex and socialism: is there a "political turn" in contemporary Irish fiction? The panel will include Michael Cronin (MU, chair); Chris Beusang (MU); Niamh Campbell (UCD); Caoilinn Hughes (TCD) 20 May 4-6 pm. He has edited The Cambridge Companion to Utopian Literature (Cambridge University Press, 2010) and (with Gareth Stedman Jones) The Cambridge History of Nineteenth Century Political Thought (Cambridge University Press, 2011), and some fifty volumes of primary sources and edited essays. In 2015 Claeys was elected to the Academia Europaea/The Academy of Europe, History Section (one of 237 members). In 2016 he was elected Chair of the Utopian Studies Society (Europe).

Cambridge Talks X | Bound and Unbound: The Sites of Utopia Keynote Lecture

4/15/16 In the five hundred years since the publication of Thomas More's Of A Republic's Best State and of the New Island of Utopia (1516), the project of imagining an ideal society has emerged as simultaneously regenerative and devastating on multiple fronts: for the concept of the polity, for the composition of social fabrics, and, most relevant from the vantage of the design disciplines, for the formation of buildings, cities, and territories. This year's Cambridge Talks, now in its tenth edition, aims to provide a spectrum of exemplary instances of utopia's modern guise. In the main conference panels, we bring together speakers to address the rivalry between those utopian endeavors that organize space mainly through social relations and production, and those whose expansive impulse searches out some form of technical mastery over spatial configuration. In other words, utopia can be understood as either embodied or totalizing, bound or unbound. By taking examples from the 19th and 20th centuries, the case studies presented here—from communes and plantations to infrastructural projects and global ecologies—exhibit various attempts to imagine social conditions alongside spatial ones. A concluding discussion will touch upon the philosophical and theoretical ramifications of utopia today. April 14, 3 PM – 6 PM PhD Colloquium Respondents: Ana Miljački, Massachusetts Institute of Technology Sonja Dümpelmann, Harvard University April 15, 9 AM – 5 PM Panel 1: Embodied Utopia Luis Casteñeda, Syracuse University Joyce Chaplin, Harvard University Erika Naginski, Harvard University Respondent: Catherine Ingraham, Pratt Institute Panel 2: Total Utopia Daniel Barber, University of Pennsylvania Sara Pritchard, Cornell University Abby Spinak, Charles Warren Center, Harvard University Respondent: John May, Harvard University Keynote Lecture Damian White, Rhode Island School of Design Discussants: K. NMC Beyond the Horizon :: Black Swans

The Internet. Tablets. 3D printing. Wearable Technology. All once outliers in discussions of possible future learning scenarios, unlikely developments in their early days according to the common wisdom, but each laden with enormous potential impact even then. Imagine if we could have anticipated these developments as they were happening and maximized their educational value early on. How might we have influenced them? Taken advantage of them? What would we have done differently? How could we have used them — right away — to the benefit of teaching and learning? For this edition of the NMC Beyond the Horizon we will have a focused conversation on the possible futures of technologies currently within our grasp, Internet privacy, the network, and machine learning.

Amanda Rees | The Future of History: From Cliodynamics to Degenerative Dystopia, via Science Fiction

This is an audio recording of a Lecture delivered by Dr. Amanda Rees (University of York) at CRASSH in Cambridge on 10 December 2019, as part of gloknos's second Annual Lectures Series. Abstract: Attempts to turn history into a quantitative, predictive science have recently been much in the news – but such approaches depend on treating the past as a reliable guide to the future, and assuming that 'human nature' (whatever that means) will remain pretty much unchanged. This approach sits uneasily alongside other claims that the pace and influence of cultural-technical change is now so great that it will fundamentally alter both the scope of society and the shape of humanity. In this talk, we will use science fiction (in particular, the work of HG Wells, Isaac Asimov, Alistair Reynolds and Jodi Taylor) to explore the relationship between these two perspectives, and to consider what lessons, if any, we can learn for the future of history. Dr Amanda Rees has published widely on the history of the field sciences, on the history and sociology of the relationship between humans and other animals, and on the history of prehistory. Her current research reflects an interest in the history of the idea of the future, with a focus on science fiction and futures in literature. CRCC Seminar Series: Utopian Hope in Dark Times

CRCC Seminar Series: "Utopian Hope in Dark Times" Presented By Dr Caroline Edwards as part of the CRCC Seminar Series on 30 April 2021 Within the context of an increasingly dystopian sense of global crisis, how can the idea of Utopia help us

galvanise political literary readings? Despite the seemingly relentless, dystopian nature of these issues contemporary writers are responding by using utopian registers in their fiction, anticipating alternative ways of imagining subjectivity, community and historical modes of belonging through formal and stylistic innovation. Literary scholars such as Fredric Jameson and Peter Boxall have commented on this distinctly “utopian turn” in twenty-first century Anglophone writing, as seen in the works of Juliana Spahr, Nnedi Okorafor, David Mitchell, Nalo Hopkinson, China Miéville, Colson Whitehead, Samuel Delany, Jennifer Egan, Kim Stanley Robinson, Jim Crace, Maggie Gee, Ali Smith, Hari Kunzru and Emily St. John Mandel. This is matched by a similar interrogation of hope as an index of political anticipation in influential theoretical works by Lynne Segal (2017), Terry Eagleton (2015), Lauren Berlant (2011) and David Harvey (2000). Drawing on her recent book, Utopia and the Contemporary British Novel (CUP, 2019), Dr Caroline Edwards will discuss the resurgence of interest in utopianism in recent years, considering how utopian methods of reading can uncover previously overlooked currents of political anticipation within works of fiction produced in “dark times.” Caroline Edwards' research focuses on the utopian imagination in contemporary literature, science fiction, apocalyptic narratives, and Western Marxism. She is author of Utopia and the Contemporary British Novel (Cambridge University Press, 2019), which examines temporal experience and utopian anticipation in contemporary texts by British writers including Hari Kunzru, Maggie Gee, David Mitchell, Ali Smith, Jim Crace, Joanna Kavenna, Grace McCleen, Jon McGregor and Claire Fuller. Her work on contemporary writers has also led to two co-edited books of essays: China Miéville: Critical Essays (Gylphi, 2015) and Maggie Gee: Critical Essays (Gylphi, 2015). Caroline is currently working on her second monograph, Science Fiction in the Era of Ecocatastrophe, which considers how fictions of extreme environments (such as Mars, Antarctica, the deep sea, and the centre of the Earth) have allowed writers to imagine creative responses to real and perceived disasters about climate change, from the late 19th century to the present day. Her other main project at the moment is editing The Cambridge Companion to British Utopian Literature and Culture, 1945-2020 (forthcoming in 2022). Caroline has written a number of journal articles for publications such as Telos, Modern Fiction Studies, Textual Practice, Contemporary Literature, Science Fiction Studies, ASAP: Journal of the Association for the Study of the Arts of the Present, the New Statesman and the Times Higher Education. Her book chapter contributions on science and utopian fiction and contemporary literature include chapters for The Cambridge Companion to British Fiction, 1980 to the Present (ed. Peter Boxall), The Cambridge Companion to Science Fiction, 2nd edition (ed. Niall Harrison, Farah Mendlesohn and Edward James), Science Fiction: A Literary History (ed. Roger Luckhurst, for the British Library Press), The Routledge Companion to Twenty-First-Century Fiction (ed. Robert Eaglestone and Daniel O'Gorman) and the Palgrave Handbook of Utopian and Dystopian Literature (ed. Jennifer Wagner-Lawlor, Fátima Vieira and Peter Marks). Caroline is on the editorial boards for the Palgrave Studies in Utopianism book series and Gylphi's SF Storyworlds: Critical Studies in Science Fiction book series. She is a member of the Modern Languages Association, the Utopian Studies Society, the Association for the Study of the Arts of the Present (ASAP), the Contemporary Women's Writing Association and the English Association. She is also a founding member of the British Association for Contemporary Literary Studies (BACLS) and acted as Secretary of the association from 2016-18.
